Sue’s News

Friday December 14, 2012

Today we are reminded of the importance of this holiday season. Today, as we mourn for so many Connecticut families, we feel numb, and helpless and scared and shaken. And we know more than ever why we must work everyday at PEACE. Peace in our families, peace in our schools, peace in our communities and peace in the world.

How do we instill the notion of peace in our children when they are experiencing and exposed to so much “un-peace” each day? As parents, how do we find the balance between embracing life and living in fear? How do we explain the unexplainable to our children?

I don’t have the answers. I have been shaken today. I will grapple with these questions as we make it through this holiday season. I will keep these families in the front of my mind. I will be a more loving and gentle mother, wife, friend, sister and daughter because of today.

I wish you all a happy and healthy weekend.

Peace,
Sue
